

Introduction

Last update 10 January 2008.

This index contains all the tune names given in the five volumes of Ceol Rince na hÉireann, with some additional names. All the names cited as belonging with the tunes printed in the books are shown below, divided into the various tune types. Names of tunes, songs, etc., cited only in reference to the tunes in the books are shown separately in the Appendix. Thus, if tune A is printed in one of the CRÉ volumes, with B as an alternative title, and C is mentioned in the text note as a distinct relative or otherwise—then A and B will appear in the index below, and C will be in the Appendix.

To make the index easier to use, tune names have been classed as primary and secondary. The "primary name" is the Irish name which appears over the tune in the book and the English form thereof; in the majority of cases, the Irish form is Breathnach's translation of the English. In a very few cases, the name by which, in the writer's experience, the tune is better known has been added as another primary name (e.g., O'Dowd's No. 9 as well as Summer in Ireland). In the case of tunes which are untitled ("gan ainm") in the books and for which a name has been found, this name is shown as the primary name; where more than one name has been found for a "gan ainm" tune, the writer's experience has again been used to decide the primary name.

The primary name of each tune is shown in standard type in Irish and English. Where two or more tunes have the same primary name they are differentiated by numerals in square brackets, e.g., "The Geese in the Bog [1]" and "The Geese in the Bog [2]". In these cases the numeral does not, of course, form part of the tune name. In a few instances Breathnach himself has distinguished between two tunes with the same primary name in the same book, by referring to them as (a) and (b), or (i) and (ii); this usage has been retained.

Secondary names are all the additional names Breathnach gives for each tune, as well as any other relevant names which have come up in the course of researching the tunes. The latter include Scottish names, some of which are fact the original names of the tunes in question; but in deference to current Irish usage they are classed here as secondary names (unless of course the Scottish name is the usual name here). Secondary names also include translations of the primary Irish name where this is not the primary English name (e.g., the first tune in CRÉ I is Cailleach an Túirne, which translates as The Hag of the Spinning Wheel, while the usual name in English is The Maid of the Spinning Wheel—in this case Cailleach... and Maid... are treated as primary titles, while Hag... is a secondary title).

Secondary names are shown in italics, and the line is indented. Secondary tune names are not differentiated by numerals; thus, where two or more tunes are referred to under the same secondary name, this does not necessarily mean that the tunes are the same, or even related.

Primary or secondary tune names marked with an asterisk are not in the original text and have been supplied by the writer.

This classification of primary and secondary names is largely for convenience and for ease in using the index. While certainly not arbitrary, it should not be interpreted as a rigid hierarchy of "correct" and "less correct" names.

Personal names are generally listed under both surname and first name, unless this would clearly be unnecessary; thus, "Denis Murphy's Slide" is listed under "D" and "M", while "Jenny Lind's Polka" is only under "J". Also, since the "O" surname prefix is sometimes dropped in informal usage, names with such a prefix are generally listed under "O" and under the following letter; thus, "Micky O'Callaghan's" is listed under "M", "O" and "C".

The Appendix contains the names of any other melodies mentioned in the text notes. While these are related in one way or another to the tunes in the books, their names are not applicable to the tunes themselves, and thus it has seemed appropriate to list them separately.

In arranging the word order of Irish (Gaelic) titles, the lenition or séimhiú (formerly a dot over the affected letter, in current usage a following "h") has been ignored: thus, bean ("woman") is adjacent to bhean, an ("woman, the"), the latter being here written b[h]ean, an for the purpose of clarity.

Appendix

Listed below are tunes, songs, airs, etc., mentioned in the text notes in reference to the tunes in CRÉ, but distinct from them. The tune numbers listed are thus not necessarily versions of the melodies listed; rather, they refer to the text note containing the reference to the melody in question. Some of the melodies below are themselves given in CRÉ, and these are also found in the general index.
